

Annotation

The bachelor's degree thesis deals with today's pressing matter of CAN syndrome. The theoretical part of the work contains a description of the term CAN, its history, definitions, content specification, the history of the legal protection of children, the characteristics of individual forms, risk factors, the causes and consequences of physical tyranny, abuse and neglect, the prevention of these phenomena and the social – legal protection of children. The work also addresses the therapy and help provided to victims at specialized facilities. The aim of bachelor's degree thesis is to map the extent to which the general public is informed about this problem, the risk factors, intervention and knowledge of crisis centres and specialized facilities. The work also aims to determine which forms of punishment are applied by parents today in comparison with the forms of punishment they were subjected to by their own parents. The thesis examines whether CAN syndrome is a symptom of the modern world or whether it was actually present in earlier times.

96  