

MEMBERS OF INDIVIDUAL TYPES OF BUSINESS COMPANY

The thesis concentrates on the following other than proprietary rights and duties of a member of Business Company: loyalty duty, right of the member to participate in governance of the Business Company, duty to follow the ban on competition, due diligence duty.

The first chapter is introducing the reader into the topic by explaining the basic concepts with which the legal regulation in the field of status of the member in the company is working with. The accent is laid on the concept of Business Company and its member and on the basic division of Business Companies into the groups according to their characteristics.

The next chapter is dealing with the individual chosen rights and duties of member in the company. First part concerns loyalty duty, which is the base of the individual duties of members in Business Companies. The attention is paid above all to the content of this duty and further to the intensity of which this duty applies in the individual types of Business Companies. In the next part of the chapter the attention is paid to the right of a member to participate in governance of the Business Company. This right comprises above all a right to participate in management of the Business Company, and next to it a right for information on the matters of the Business Company. The reader is submitted a comparison regarding the extent in which the right of a member to participate in management of the Business Company and right for information apply in the individual types of Business Companies. This part is followed by the exposition of a duty of a member to follow the ban on competition and it deals with the definition of the action that is within the individual types of Business Companies declared as competitive and with effect of this action in the individual types of Business Companies. In the end of this chapter the conception of the due diligence duty in the Czech law and its content is explained.