

Abstract

Author: Bc. Valerie Sedláčková

Title: The relationship between dysfunctional childhood and occurrence of sexual deviance in adulthood

Objectives: The objective of the theoretical part is to contribute to the objectification of sexual deviations in adults. Focus in more detail on important terms and their explanations. Insight into the more complex issue of sexual deviations and the circumstances associated with them. The practical part is focused on documenting the answers to the questions asked in the questionnaire with the resulting analysis of the results. The aim of this diploma thesis is to find out whether a dysfunctional childhood has a relationship to the emergence of sexual deviations in adulthood.

Methods: This thesis has the character of quantitative research. The results were obtained using an anonymous questionnaire, which was constructed by the author of this work and compiled using a form on Google Forms, from which the results were transferred to MS Excel and subsequently reworked and converted into graphs and contingency tables

Results: there were 183 respondents from the Czech Republic took part in the survey. All were over 18 years of age. In total, 102 women, 80 men and one non-binary person participated in the research. The results showed that a dysfunctional childhood is related to the emergence of sexual deviations in adulthood.

Keywords: dysfunction, deviance, paraphilia, childhood, sex, family, addictions