

This doctoral thesis aims to examine the complex process of social and cultural adaptation as experienced by a chosen migrant group. It is concerned with the asylum seekers reflection of the particular parts of this process rather than with the adaptation process as a whole.