

The purpose of my thesis is to analyze all instruments of international law for protection of refugees. During the twentieth century the international communities produced several universal and regional documents. Even though the only special universal treaty concerning refugees is almost sixty years old and it doesn't meet all needs in this area of our days. Fortunately there are also other human rights documents providing fundamental rights for all the people including refugees. The thesis is composed of five chapters, each of them dealing with different aspects of mass refugeeism.

Chapter One is introductory to migration as such and it defines basic terminology used in the thesis. Chapter Two consists of three parts. First part includes definition of sources of international law in general and second part contains history context of current international refugee law. Third part of this chapter focuses on current universal and regional documents dealing with refugees and asylum.

Chapter Three is subdivided into five parts and provides an outline of relevant rules of general human rights which strengthen also rights of refugees and especially some groups of refugees such women and children.

Chapter Four concentrates on problems resulting from the control mechanism which are incorporated in the most important international treaties dealing with human right. First part of this chapter describes responsibility in international law. Second part deals with universal and regional administrative control mechanism and part three with universal and regional judicial control mechanism.

Conclusions of current refugee crisis are drawn in Chapter Five. The main aim of the thesis is to prove that there are several practises which should be followed by international communities. Even though these practices are not obligatory I suggest that there should be accepted new legislation to share refugee burden and responsibility. There are two institutes that provide solutions for refugees. First of these is temporary refuge and the second is mechanism of durable solutions for refugees. It contains local integration, repatriation and resettlement. The main stress I put on resettlement because UNHCR developed a good resettlement procedure and it just depends on a good will of countries to cooperate on it. Final part is therefore dedicated to the future prospect of the European Union in this issue
