Examination proceedings:	During the thesis defence, the student discussed his theoretical framework, focusing on the difference between radical right-wing populism and far-right extremism. The student has also been asked about the broader context of his research. His answers were partial and did not fully explain the distinction between radical and extreme elements. The student also discussed topics which, according to him, were relevant to Georgescu's campaign. The committee asked about his contribution to the broader context of radical right-wing populism, but the student was unable to provide satisfactory answers. Based on the discussion, the student received 65 points for his defence performance (grade D), thus in total 87 points (grade B) as his Final Grade.
