

Abstract

This master thesis discusses the gender dynamics in cyberspace environment. The anonymous nature of this relatively new phenomena leads to several manifestations of hate speech. To be more precise, this work focuses on sexism and misogyny in the Internet environment. The theoretical part discusses the elementary theory about the nature of cyberspace and relationships between masculinities. The aim of the research part is to make critical discourse analysis which investigates reactions of debaters below articles about misogynist statements by two Czech footballers towards female referee Lucia Ratajová.
