

The thesis deals with two 20th century most popular translators of classical Chinese poetry into Czech: Bohumil Mathesius and Ferdinand Stožek. Their work is presented as determined rather by historical and cultural context of their time as well as by the type of their personality than by the original Chinese poems which they translated. This is supported by an analysis of particular paraphrases and their comparison with the original.