

The subject of this study is to collect English origin lexical units from different communication areas that have been accepted by Hungarian and Czech after 1989. Then to compare the different problems of their adaptation, an influence of the language politics on the use of loanwords and the tendency to form an adequate equivalent.