

This thesis introduces the problem of ritual purity in Judaism divided thematically into three sections: tevilah (ritual immersion in mikveh), netilat yadayim (ritual hand washing) and kashrut (laws concerning food). Every section deals in detail with different situations that the purifying act applies to. The main focus is directed to the Torah and the application of biblical laws in contemporary Jewish practice.