

The first section of this thesis, which is entitled “The issue of insurance publicly available childcare for children under the age of three – the Czech Republic in the context of European Union”, starts by outlining the common themes of the European Union's family policy, followed by the specific strategies for supporting families in selected European countries. The second part then outlines the family support options in the Czech Republic, with special consideration for the issue of childcare services for children under three. The third part presents a concrete model for childcare for underthrees as it has been implemented in the capital of the Federal Republic of Germany, Berlin.
