

My dissertation is called “The German Greens”, later “Alliance '90/ The Greens” and their programmatic progression”. In my résumé I would like to summarize my thesis.

Firstly there are some important political terms: a political party, a political movement, a civil initiative and an environmental movement. I tried to define them in coherences. The green parties were usually created from the successful political movements. The green parties have a very similar ideology to the ecological movements. The ecological movements work only on environmental problems whereas the Green Party concerns with social, political and economical problems. Secondly the German Green Party belongs to the left political spectrum. The German Green party has a similarly ideology to the Social Democratic Party of Germany. The main supporters of The Greens are young middle-class voters, often students, employees, well-educated people and women.
