My diploma thesis deals with the issue of gender-based linguistic differences examined in the context of social variables. The aim of this work is to introduce the theoretical background of the study of gender and language, to present major concepts prevailing across the area of the study of gender and language, compare them and discuss and examine gender-based linguistic differences from the perspective of the society and the influence it has on its speakers.