

This thesis deals with domestic violence against men committed by women. It starts with defining the phenomenon of domestic violence generally using the contextualization. The main part of the thesis focuses on domestic violence against men and its aspects. The characteristic features of this form of spousal assault are completed with several statistics from the Czech Republic and from abroad as well. The description of the domestic violence against men consists of typical forms of illNusage committed by women, consequences of it and the list of the most frequent cause of women's aggressiveness against partner. A brief evaluation of services provided to men under threat by most significant NGOs is included. The thesis contains public inquiry focusing on men under threat of domestic violence as well. In conclusion two different casuistries are used to elucidate theoretical information of this thesis.