

SUMMARY

This diploma thesis deals with the problem of fight against doping in sport and with the possibility of application of Christian moral values in the antidoping prevention. The introductory part gives the information on definition of doping, on prohibited substances and methods, on history of doping, on current doping practice and on ways of the fight against doping nowadays. The next part is dedicated to the view of moral theology on the use of doping, it concentrates in particular on the experience of conscience and on the perception of guilt. From the Christian point of view the practice of doping is in contradiction with the Fifth, the Seventh and the Eighth Commandment of the Decalogue. There are mentioned the most important negative phenomena connected with doping, especially the health and moral consequences.

The main part of the thesis is focused on the prevention of doping, particularly on the area of education. The problem of doping should be discussed with adolescents very frankly. The cheating practices of athletes should be called by their names, they should be marked in a true way. The education of conscience and the education in virtues are considered as an important part of the prevention of doping. The preventive educational system of Don Bosco was not omitted and it was recommended as a successfully applicable contribution to the prevention of doping in sport. The Christian moral values correspond well with the principle of fair-play and this is why they can serve the athletes as a sure guideline for the correct behaviour.