

This bachelor work deals with children and youth position towards gipsy population and describes factors that these attitudes affect. It shows access of majority society towards gipsy population and interprets fundamental terms as racism, xenophobia and racial discrimination. It also mentions international and domestic law arrangements concerning racial discrimination. Further this work represents lowHthreshold facilities for children and youth and points out to their value in education of young generation towards racial differences toleration. It describes target group characteristics of these facilities and contact worker importance in process of improving relationships between gipsy and non-gipsy clients of low-threshold facilities. The practical part of this work describes development of relationships between clients low-threshold facility „Vrtule“ in Praha-Kobylisy and evaluates talks between gipsy and nonHgipsy clients of this facility aimed at their mutual relations.