

The main topic of this work are two exchange programs – Streetwork and Streetmobil I which are organized by the Drop In Foundation. These two street programs are very often the first services which a drug user meets. The target population of this type of services is the so called hidden population, with minimum motivation to seek professional assistance and to solve their problems. Both programmes are focused on minimizing the health and social risks and the negative impacts of drug misuse for users themselves and for the society. The aim of this work is to describe how these programs work, what the differences between them are and why they are so important.
