Comments:
The main topics of the thesis is a hot one, discussed widely and globally, both from theoretical and practical points of view. Moreover, existing and potential concepts of carbon regulation have enormous impact on costs, investment decisions, competitiveness. The author shows a very good (with some tolerable mistakes) understanding and knowledge of the topic. Specifically I appreciate author's ability and serious work exploring sources and literature, together with evidence of an independent thought and own value added.
Specific Questions for oral defence:
The serious problem in global regulation of carbon is "voluntary" willingness of the EU member states to accept strict carbon regulation. It applies for many developed countries as well. In contrary, most of developing and newly industrialised countries are against acceptance of such strict regulations. The increasing implications for competitiveness are obvious. Author's opinion on potential options for solution?
