

Male and female “culture” has many advantages and disadvantages in both the private and public sphere. Our society focuses attention on these advantages and disadvantages and thus invokes an atmosphere of two competing worlds. Competition is common in the western world today, but applied in the gender area, it does not help to create a more quality coexistence. The perfect perviousness of the rights and responsibilities throughout the male and female cultures, which is being theoretically promoted by current society, does not solve the problem of the question of gender. Moreover, the perfect perviousness itself is not even possible.

This text suggests the way of respect and reverence to an individual and his or her originality and evaluation of one's work based on other criteria than one's salary and earnings. Hence I consider partnership as a productive area which offers a different perspective in perceiving the opposite sex. The possibility of a unique perception exhibited in a more tolerant attitude bordering with awe to differences of the opposite sex is visible not only in the initial state of being in love but also in the state of intimacy and mutual recognition of a partner's needs in later phases of the relationship. Partnership is understood here as an intensified meeting of male and female cultures. Partnership is thus the area where a new culture originates. This new culture is created by the blending of the two original cultures and their mutual acculturation. A new space is being opened for us; it is a space where we can learn about the world of the opposite sex, its nuances, its “advantages” and “disadvantages”. Through the tolerant approach of partnership love and the loving and respecting atmosphere in the family, prejudice about the opposite sex can be avoided. This way, the approach of respect and reverence to differences could be then also transferred to the sphere of public life.
