

The master thesis „Sexual harassment in the Czech university environment from the female students' perspective- qualitative probe“ focuses on how students perceive sexual and gender harassment and what their experiences with it are at the Czech universities.

The theoretical part contains explanations of important terms, discusses definitions of sexual harassment, further considers power topics related to sexual harassment, points to who is harassed and why and finally, shows specialities of the university environment including prevention of sexual harassment.

The empirical part introduces qualitative research- semi-structured interviews about sexual harassment with 18 female students of Czech universities. It interprets several important topics, in particular: definitions of sexual and gender harassment, experiences with it and reactions to it, power, fear, relations between teachers and students, alcohol, (non)talking about sexual harassment etc.
