

This doctoral thesis is divided into two parts. The first part focuses on introducing and analysing the literature summarising the results of the contemporary research on the relationship between human morphology, behavioural, psycho-social aspects and testosterone. The second part consists of the chapter the Historical Notes (published in the book Human Face), dealing with the relationship between the soul and the body in a broader historical context, and also five scientific articles.