

This thesis tries to catch four dependent villages of the royal mining town of Kašperské Hory
v

- Damič, Nezdice na Sumavě, Ostružno and Pohorsko. On grounds of different sorts of sources describes their history, development and problems. No one of these villages belonged to one suzerain, but they were divided from two to four complexes. That joined them together, as well as their emplacement in highland country of Pošumaví. The author tries to sketch out with a little help from cadastres (berní rula, thesian register) and land books a situation in the 17. and 18. century. Local sources allow him to explore also so called names vy houses, in which time they came into being, how are they conserved and developed. In this work has a respect to domain, in which these villages were situated. For help is also taken an exclusive monument - a map of the domain from the year 1755. There is also a mention of a rebellion, which grew up from an untrue interpretation of dependents' legal stand, which felt like a dependents of chantry, not of the town.
