

The Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine.

Abstract

The main purpose of my thesis is to analyse The Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine. Author's main focus is determined by the title of the thesis and she mainly concentrates on individual provisions of the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine and their incorporation in Czech law and order.

The thesis is composed of introduction, three chapters and conclusion.

Chapter one deals with medical law. It defines medical law and describes legal rules relating to health care.

Chapter two generally describes The Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine. It is subdivided into four sections dealing with reasons of creation and aims of this Convention, bioethics and medical experiments.

Chapter Three is the most comprehensive. It contains fourteen parts. These subchapters describe particular provisions and chapters of the Convention and their regulation in Czech legal system.

Conclusions are drawn in the last chapter. The main aim of the thesis was to analyse the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine and its benefit and influence on Czech legal system.

Author recommends passing new general legal regulation concerned with medical law because of obsolescence and insufficiency actual regulation (act No. 20/1966 Sb.). New legal regulation could better react to progress in this area and better explicate principles and ideas of the Convention.
