This thesis describes the birth of the radical wing of the movement for women's suffrage in Britain, its development and changes during the years 1903 - 1914. This thesis additionally describes changes in strategy and tactics used by members of this militant wing and the picture of themselves and the movement which they tried to create for the public.