

Key words

Sufficient child development of school entry, readiness for school entry, delayed school entry, educational diagnostics, key competencies, individual approach, school achievement, school entry, experiment

Annotation

Even though most of the children attend kindergarten before they attend school, a number of children have delayed entry, because of their in-maturity. This delayed entry is rather increasing. The General educational programme marks out the key competencies, which each child should attain before attending school. Most kindergartens follow this educational programme to prepare children for school entry. In particular, the question is: „Is it necessary to discuss the school attendance competencies with the children's parents?"