Abstract

The thesis deals with public participation in project planning at the local level. In the thesis there are described the participants, defined various types of participation, the domination factors that affect measure of participation, and also it's advantages and disadvantages are mentioned there. The theoretic process of public the participation is described step by step. The practical part of thesis is focused on the conditions of public participacipation in the city Jičín, concretely on the case of the the state's regeneration project. The process of involving the citizens into the project is investigated on the basis of the interviews with city clerks and by studying of official documents. The citizens'atitiude is stated by questionnaires. It seems that city Jičín tries to get citizens involved in the projects and that estate's regeneration project cames out from the opinion of citizens. Citizens are mostly satisfied with estate's regeneration, but not all of them's particular comments are answerd.