

This paper deals with automatic classification of text documents, showing advantages of the classification as well as showing difficulty during implementation. It presents several methods in detail, based on analysis of document linking and bayesian filtering. Part of the task is testing on real web pages which should demonstrate the quality of the specific verification methods used.