

The diploma thesis deals with a comparison of selected areas of Czech and French immigration policy, focusing on a comparison of an environment in which the policies are made up and terms of employment and family immigration for third country citizens coming to these countries.

Comparison of environment was based on a role of European Union immigration policy, specific conditions of countries' experiences with immigration and political/social approach to this issue. Conditions for work and family immigration focuses on conditions for employment, entrepreneurship and family reunification in compared countries. A section in this part is also devoted to comparison of restrictive and integration measures which are commonly associated with these analyzed purposes of immigration.
