

The bachelor thesis The Initiation of foreign workers employment in the industry corporations of the Northrhine – Westphalia deals with the reasons that led to the state-supported employment of Italian workers in the Federal Republic of Germany since 1955. It observes two particular industrial corporations in the Northrhine-Westphalia before this year and compares it with the common statement that the employment was a result of the situation in the German economy. This idea has been doubted in the recent years. The federal country was chosen because of the very low level of unemployment, which makes it an ideal recipient of labour. The thesis should come to the conclusion whether these two corporations conformed to the common concept that the demand for labour was enormous and it was considered to persist in a long term.
