

The presented paper is devoted to the description of two important phraseological units in modern Chinese language – chengyu and xiehouyu. It describes their origins, nature and function. The paper is divided into three main sections. The first section introduces issues of the general phraseology, the second and the third part speak about the analyzed phraseological units. The last short sections compare revealed characteristics of the Chinese phraseological units with Czech ones.