

The thesis aims to map the relapse problem. The theoretic part includes different views on the relapse and it bring up the explanation of the phenomena which are closely to the relapse and it basic characteristics of this problem. Last but not least, this part also concerns with the methods used for working with the relapse.

The empirical part of the thesis consists of a case study. The main target of the case study was to present on a concrete case the psychological aspects the relapse, and possible application of the theory on the individual parts of the client's relapse.