

The thesis describes the communication-pragmatic turn in linguistics, monitors the stimuli that resulted in pragmalinguistic research. Pragmatically oriented linguistics and its basic issues are characterized: speech acts, verbal communication strategy, argumentation in communication and nonverbal communication. The findings of selected topics are applied in analysing records of utterances. The thesis is concluded by assessing the relation between theoretical knowledge of pragmatic aspects of communication and real communication practice.