ABSTRACT
Title: Outdoor activities as a means of integrating people after spinal cord injury
Object: The research work related to a young man after spinal cord injury with a current diagnosis quadriplegia.
Aim: To prepare a theoretical basis for follow-up and verify the thesis positive impact of outdoor activities to integrate persons after spinal cord injury.
Method: To meet the targets was used analysis of personal documents and two different structured interviews with open questions.
Results: The expected positive effect of outdoor activities on the process of integration of the spinal cord injury in this case was confirmed.
Reintegration client to camp program has led to support the process of dealing with injury and also had a positive effect to increase its efforts to actively address the consequences of injury.
Key words: spinal cord injury, integration, activities in nature