The Question of Housing in Czechoslovak Interwar Architecture
– Minimum Dwelling in Housing Competition for Prague

This bachelor thesis deals with a problem of the minimum dwelling that was one of the most important topics of the avant-garde architecture. The main emphasis will be placed on public housing competitions in Prague during 1930–1931 and architectural designs, which brought new and progressive perceptions to the dilemma of an ideal housing estate. Due to the width of public housing problems, this thesis will be primarily focused on architectural works created for Prague.
