

This bachelor thesis deals with architectural form of monastery church of St. Joseph in Moravská Třebová.

First chapter subsumes historical facts of cloister and church and describes architecture of church. Second chapter gives a comparison with work of author, architect Jacopo Brascha, the other moravian baroque churches and especially churches and buildings near Moravská Třebová, buildings of franciscan order and buildings founded by Karel Eusebius of Liechtenštejn.

Characteristics of church of St. Joseph is front without a tower and the groundplan typical of franciscan churches, but this church is a bit more decorated than usual.

This thesis describes the facts and architectural appearance of this church and compares architectural conception with other Czech and Moravian baroque buildings in order to find the differences and common points.