

A new model of the labour market and new possibilities of life strategies, which have been triggered of by economic, cultural and political changes after 1989, have brought along with them new conditions of participation in the labour market and hereby a necessity to approach differently the reconciliation of professional and family life.

This work is an analysis of socio-political conditions, financial possibilities and time which both families and employers have at their disposal in order to reconcile the professional and family life of their own or that of their employees.

The work draws on the available statistical and sociological sources that can contribute to understanding of the current situation and which are concerned with the problems and potential solutions for reconciling work and family.
