

Bachelor thesis deals with the conscientious objection in Czechoslovakia between 1918 and 1938 and describes the religious associations, movements and sects, whose members and supporters refused military service. Furthermore, it explores government's reaction to the phenomenon, especially the resulting repressions.