

This master's thesis focuses on the project of child sponsorship in the Czech Republic, aiming to analyse where the selected Czech organizations involved direct the contributions, what control mechanisms they apply, and also other related issues (contributions to the sponsored child community, the effectiveness criteria of this project). The introductory part of the thesis outlines the problematic aspects of the project, its history, and also the accreditation process of child sponsorship organizations in the United States.