

This thesis is devoted to a socialistic propaganda in Czechoslovak and Bulgarian publicistic texts, explanatory dictionaries and other written materials of the 1940s and 1950s. It compares a press-lexicon being used before socialistic revolutions in 1944, 1948 and after them. Found realia shall be compared with the synchronic Russian materials. The thesis specifies a compendium of the most characteristic contemporary designations, follows their functions in publicistic and other texts (political speeches, essays). It documents an influence of Russian language upon the Czech and Bulgarian. It notes the relation between linguistic and historical events.