

This dissertation explores costume and ritual as individual categories and then adds the theory about the role of costume in ritual acts. The dissertation explores the significance of costume and its' essentiality. Further it introduces the relationship between costume and ritual and sets both of them as parts of a complex system where change of one component leads to subsequent changes of other components and can result in a change of the whole structure.