

This study is focused on the internships for students' of social sciences in the public and nonprofit sector in the Czech Republic. The whole topic is analyzed from the perspective of the main stakeholders – MŠMT, experts, students, universities, and organizations from the public and nonprofit sectors. The aim of the study is to make an overview of internships, to explore the current environment influencing the internships, and discover the quality level of internships provided by universities. In the first part, the study looks at theoretical concepts, which discuss the area of internships' quality assurance, experiential learning and A-A-A model. The theoretical part is a basis for the following part, which, through two analyses – environment and stakeholders', and by using the quantitative-qualitative methods, explores the situation in the Czech Republic. Finally, the study looks at both the positions of the stakeholders, as well as at their level of interest and "power". Based on the imperfections found throughout the analysis, the conclusion of this study presents several suggestions for improvement and quality assurance of the internships.
