

This thesis deals with the cooperation of civil sector and local self-government of the capital Prague territory. I am focusing in particular on the specification of the local government and non-government organizations (NGOs) on administration districts of Prague 1 –22 and on the comparison of their cooperation. The first part specifies the term cooperation and the reasons for a cooperation of the local government and NGOs. The following chapters describe a function and a position of municipality and the question of party affiliation impact on the relation between the local government and NGOs. The whole part is concluded by a reflection of the danger of total partnership between NGOs and political parties and their permanent dependence. It is followed by a legal definition of NGOs, which are subjects of researches, and a description of the evaluated criteria. The second half of the thesis studies the complete cooperation level on various Prague districts (1 –22) according to comparative analysis documents of municipals, according to interviews and “Analysis of social service providers”. There is a different level of cooperation on particular Prague districts, even though they are not so remarkable.
