

This master thesis deals with various concepts of social justice. At first, social justice is defined and the advisability of this term is defended. Subsequently, the two influential concepts of social justice are presented – the concept of John Rawls (justice as fairness) and the concept of Robert Nozick (justice as entitlement). This paper also deals with the application of the concept of social justice to international order. In the end of this thesis the concept of public reason is discussed, its possible limitations and the problem of coexistence of people who are followers of different concepts of justice.
