

The purpose of this thesis is to find out, whether the needs of the young pupil age children are satisfied and their rights are observed. Relevant data were collected through anonymous questionnaire filled by 100 students (55 boys and 45 girls) of third and fourth classes of elementary school Konečná in Karlovy Vary. The questionnaire was aimed to leisure time and children's non-school activities. Data were statistically processed and illustrated with charts.

Author found out that almost 60 % children from the sample watches TV two hours and less in working days. More than 80 % of respondents spend two or less hours with computer in working days. More than 90 % respondents like sport. 64 % respondents regularly attend to bees; boys prefer sport bees, girls artistic ones. One third of the respondents are not satisfied with the length of the time spent with their parents. More than 80 % respondents can spend at least part of their leisure time according to their wishes.

Author compared her results with similar older studies. She stated some preventive recommendations, which can lead to better satisfying of young pupil age children's needs and better observance of children's rights.