

Abstract

Diploma thesis „The Preferential voting of the Koalice voters in the elections for the Chamber of Deputies in 2002. Never more with the KDU-ČSL into the coalition“ is concerned with the preferential voting of the Koalice voters in the elections in 2002 in selected electoral districts which are The Liberec Region, The Hradec Králové Region and The Zlín Region. The thesis focuses especially on the question in how big municipalities gained the KDU-ČSL and the US-DEU candidates the highest support from voters, whether there was a connection between the distribution of preferential votes for the KDU-ČSL candidates and the US-DEU voters of the Koalice in 2002 with distribution of preferential votes for these parties by the Čtyřkoalice voters in the regional elections in 2000; whether the structure of municipalities, in which the Koalice voters in 2002 and the KDU-ČSL and the US voters in 1998 in the elections for the PSP ČR bestowed the highest and the lowest percentage of preferential notes, was different; whether the proportion of preferential votes for the KDU-ČSL and the US-DEU candidates was connected with a local variability of the chosen sociodemographic variables and what was the distribution of regional electoral support of the best successful candidates in 2002. The basic level of the almost whole research is the level of municipalities except of the last question which is examined at the district level.

Keywords

KDU-ČSL, Koalice, Regional elections, Parliamentary elections, Preferential voting, US-DEU