

This thesis presents the development of an MT system between Indonesian and Malaysian. The system uses a method of almost a direct translation exploiting the similarity of both languages. This method was previously used on a number of language pairs of European languages. The thesis also elaborates the attempts to make language resources from scratch since the languages are under-resourced.