

This dissertation presents an analysis of public reactions towards official anti-Semitism in Slovakia from 1938 until 1945. There are two research questions that this thesis answers: What was the mood and attitude of the Slovak society towards the so-called Jewish question between the establishment of Slovak autonomy and the collapse of the wartime state? What influenced the general mood and attitude the most?