The content of this bachelor thesis is determining of actual need of assistance for people with Cerebral Palsy and finding an answer this question: “Which is the acquisition of personal assistant for people with Cerebral Palsy?”. The methodic accession contains these particular methods: theoretical study of professional literature, questionnaire research among clients and personal assistants, observation and interview. The result of practical research is detection that the personal assistants are beneficial especially in the sphere of independent living, beneficial for families, like a respite service, and like a friend for people with Cerebral Palsy.