

Abstract

Bachelor thesis "Perceptions and attitudes to family of Hispanic immigrants" deals with the qualitative research conducted among immigrants from Spanish-speaking countries living in the Czech Republic. During the interviews were examined attitudes of respondents towards the interpretation of character and function of their own families, with an emphasis on the interpretation of the value aspects related to the culture. The paper then focuses on the fact as how Hispanic immigrants perceive the form of Czech families in connection with their dual cultural experience. The analytical section provides a detailed view at the studied issue, based on an analysis of the individual questions. The global perspective is then interpreted within the final part of the paper.
