

This theses focuses on the position of renewed scout movement in the formation of civil structures in the period of Prague Spring. It also describes the story of scout movement in the period of beginning „normalization“. It concentrates on broader social contexts and analyzes social clientele of the movement.